COMPLIMENTED.

The following recently appeared in the Talent, a New York weekly, and will be appreciated by people of this village and vicinity:

Boston, Nov. 30, 1895.

S. M. Spedron, 61 World Building.

Dear Sir, I thought, now that I've had a little experience in the extreme Eastern country, it might be well to relate the same, or compare with the business elsewhere. We hear of some "exceptional" cases of small towns running courses, etc., but I have a challenge to offer to any agent in any part of the country, to produce an equal to the following:

Barton, Vt., situated on the Boston & Maine R.R., between St. Johnsbury and Newport, is a village of eleven hundred inhabitants. The following lecture and entertainment course has been booked there this season: Rev. Thomas Dixon, of N. Y.; Rev. Russell H. Conwell, of Phila.; Hon. Geo. R. Wendling, of Washington; Prof. John B. DeMotte, of Indiana; Festival Concert Co. of Boston. This course costs in the vicinity of $700.

Without further comment on the above, the question often arises, "How can we make a course 'pay' in small towns?"

Here is the absolute solution of the question. The "best is the cheapest" always in all departments of life, but especially so in the running of Entertainment Courses. Last year this enterprising little town made between two and three hundred dollars clear on their first course. Someone may say, "well, probably there is a seminar or college there." I answer, No! Nothing of the sort; it is but an ordinary country town (with more than ordinary aggressiveness). The chairman of the committee, Mr. H. J. Stannard, is the principal of the public school, and a very much "up to date" enterprising young man; the members of the executive committee, being business men of the town, H. C. Pierce being Vice Chairman, H. K. Dewey, Sec.; F. W. Cutting, Treas. They sell course tickets for $1.50.

GEORGE W. BRITT,
New Eng. Rep. Redpath Lyceum Bureau.

The commandant of the Marine Corps reports that the limit of human endurance has about been reached, in the work assigned the corps to do, yet the new ships soon to be added to the navy will add to the imperative duty to be done. This is another item in the general complaint that the increase in the ships of the navy has not been accompanied by a corresponding growth in the numerical force necessary to man the new ships. We are short of naval engineers, short of experienced seamen, short of common "hands," and short of material for marine guards and the other duties of the Corps of Marines. "We should either fish or cut bait,"—either put ourselves in a condition to fight if necessary,—without the slightest intention of attacking anybody,—or just quietly lie down and own up to all the world that fighting is not our creed.

The industrial progress of the South during the period of the protective tariff policy is indicated by the report of the labor commissioner of North Carolina, which tells us that there are in that state 156 cotton and woolen mills in active operation and 11 in course of construction. There are 913,458 spindles and 24,588 looms. In 1870 there were only 30,000 spindles. The mills during the year consumed 123,658,000 pounds of cotton, or about 309,000 bales. The industrial activity indicated by these statistics has been created under the influence of a protective tariff policy, and what is true of North Carolina is true of every other Southern state, the progress in some of them being even more marked. Is it at all strange that the South is forcibly rebelling against a Democratic tariff policy whose tendency is to stop the spindles and still the whirling wheels of industry?—Statesman.

At the annual meeting of the New England Association of School Superintendents held last week, Superintendent M. S. Stone of this State was elected president of the organization. This is a deserved compliment to an enthusiastic, progressive and successful educator, who is also a conscientious and capable official. Mr. Stone is doing splendid work for the common schools of Vermont and our citizens will be pleased that his abilities as an educator are meeting with recognition beyond the limits of the State.—Ludlow Tribune.

In the recent trial of skill between the Maine and the Cushing, the torpedo boat twice succeeded in getting within striking distance of the big battleship in spite of the fact that four of the strongest search lights of the navy were sweeping the waters for her. What made the test more decisive was the fact that the Cushing could not be seen, although she was in the full glare of the lights, her small size and dull paint combining to render her invisible. The torpedo boats of the navy are indeed small affairs, but it looks very much as if they command respect.

The tomb in the Norristown, Pa., cemetery, in which the remains of Gen. W. S. Hancock are placed, is rapidly crumbling away, and a movement which has been initiated by the old Second Army Corps to have them transferred to the beautiful Arlington cemetery, where the bodies of Sheridan, Crook and a score of other heroes of the Rebellion repose, is likely to be successful. The consent of all members of the family except of one brother, has been secured, and this will doubtless be given. A prominent site has been selected at Arlington, and if the removal shall take place, a handsome monument will be erected above the grave. It is fitting that his tomb and monument should be the nation's care. Hancock may not rank with the two or three great captains of the Union Army, but he will be remembered as the "superb soldier."

SOMETHING ABOUT POTATOES.

There is nothing very beautiful about a potato, and yet it is an object of universal interest. The people who do not like potatoes are so few that their absence would scarcely be noted in taking a census. According to an article in the New York Tribune, the world's average potato crop for many years has been estimated by experts, aided by official statistics, at over 3,000,000,000 bushels, which exceeds the average annual crop of grain by fully 750,000,000 bushels. It appears that the United States stands fifth among those countries which are the largest producers of potatoes, the average annual yields of the five being as follows: Germany, 784,000,000 bushels; Russia, 521,000,000; France, 385,000,000; Austria, 285,000,000; United States, 200,000,000. It seems strange that Great Britain and Ireland do not seem to be "in it" in raising the "Irish" potato.

The Tribune article states that the average annual receipts of potatoes in New York City are about 2,000,000 barrels, each barrel containing from two and one half to three-fourths bushels, or a total of from 5,000,000 to 6,000,000 bushels. Of this supply, an average quantity of about 250,000 barrels are exported to the West Indies, leaving about 1,740,000 barrels for consumption in and around the metropolis. New York's supply of potatoes is received from different sources at different times of the year. The new Bermuda crop begins to arrive about February 1, and comes in at an average weekly rate of 2,500 barrels. These potatoes bring a high price, usually selling for from $5 to $7 a barrel at wholesale. The Florida crop, a comparatively small one, makes its first appearance about April 1, and brings about the same price as the Bermuda potatoes. In May or June Georgia potatoes come in from Savannah at the rate of about 10,000 barrels a week, and the price drops from $6 to $3 a barrel. After the first of August the market is chiefly supplied by Long Island and New Jersey, whose early crops are dug in the latter part of July and August, and late crops in September. A small supply of potatoes is usually received in the fall from Scotland and Canada.

For some reason, this country does not seem to make the most of its opportunities in potato raising. There are but 10 states which produce potatoes for shipment to markets beyond their own borders. These are Maine, Vermont, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Michigan, Ohio, Wisconsin, Minnesota and Virginia. The potato crop this year is exceptionally large, and as a consequence prices are low.—Telegraph.

Those who think the recent dry spell an unprecedented one may change their minds when we quote from the record of a few other droughts, as follows: In 1662 there were 80 days in succession without rain; in 1680, 81 days; in 1694, 62 days; 1724, 61 days; in 1730, 92 days; in 1741, 72 days; (1749, 108 days; in 1762, 153 days; in 1783, 80 days; in 1791, 82 days without rain. It will be seen that the longest dry time that ever occurred in America was in the summer of 1762. No rain fell from the first of May until the first of September, 153 days without rain. All the way, at intervals, from 1630 to 1835 there have been droughts of more or less severity, say from 41 to 153 days without rainfall.

OXFORD UNIVERSITY.

How the Audience in the Galleries Behaves During Commencement Exercises.

A bright and observant woman, just returned from a tour of Europe, thus relates her experience at Oxford on the evening of degree day: "We sat in the great hall where the exercises were to take place. It seemed as if all the dignitaries of church and state were present, besides a vast crowd of people who packed every gallery to overflowing. Professor Roberts sat at the organ waiting for the entrance of the faculty and students. The Marquis of Salisbury, chancellor of the university; the Earl of Carnarvon, high steward, and all the proctors, burgesses, librarians, keepers, orators, professors and moderators were present. It was a dignified occasion.

"Suddenly from the highest gallery came a thin voice:

"Oh, Mr. Roberts, won't you please to oblige us all by playing that beautiful composition entitled 'Her Golden Hair Was Hanging Down Her Back?'"

"Not a head was turned in the hall. The crowd sat in studied silence. I thought it the most shocking thing I had ever heard of, but the great people around me seemed to take not the slightest notice of it. In a minute or two the voice was heard again:

"Oh, Mr. Roberts, are you going to oblige us with that sweetest of melodies this evening entitled 'Her Golden Hair Was Hanging Down Her Back?'" Perhaps you have forgotten it, Mr. Roberts?"

"Up arose a man on the other side of the hall.

"Perhaps the gentleman making the request of Mr. Roberts does not understand that this is too dignified an occasion for the music he has mentioned. Mr. Roberts would like to play for us all a nocturne or something of similar character."

"But Mr. Roberts sat still.

"At last the procession entered and the crowd awoke. 'Walk right to the front, gentlemen, and don't be bashful,' said a voice in the gallery, while from the opposite side came a running fire of words that were bold, sarcastic and witty. The graduates read their papers or tried to read them, but not a word was heard from one of them. The sallies from the crowd were so vigorous and so constant that they riveted the attention of the entire audience. One of the graduates wore a flaming red necktie, which the galleries did not admire.

"Take off that red rag!" they called from all sides. He read on. 'Off with that red rag!' 'Get out and borrow another tie!' 'We'll excuse you for ten minutes, but for heaven's sake get on another tie!' 'We can stand the speech, but we can't stand that tie!' 'Off with it!'

"As the student paid no attention to these remarks, one of the gallery gods leaned over the railing in full view of the audience, and taking off his own tie threw it down to the stage, calling out: 'Here, you are, my boy. I'll lend you this till you can get another. Return it to 24 High Street.'

"Late in the evening I met several friends among the faculty and expressed surprise that such interruptions were allowed.

"Oh, that is what we go for," explained one of the professors. 'Nobody cares to hear the papers read. All want to listen to the remarks from the galleries. The wit was not at all up to the standard this year, not at all. Last year it was really very clever. It made most of us laugh.'"—New York Press.

Careful With Tea.

As a rule, it is only among the prosperous that one finds the pet meanness. The poor haven't time to develop fads of any kind; they never have much of anything, but they give of their little in a way that puts their richer neighbors to blush.

The most amusing instance I can recall of the effect of a suddenly acquired fortune upon a pet meanness is that told by an English author about an old woman in an almshouse, who came into a million by a chancery decision that had been pending 100 years. She bought everything that money could buy—silks, velvets, laces, furs, estates, carriages, horses, solid friends even. She threw away her bank notes upon everything imaginable, in a kind of frenzy of possession. But when it came to tea she suffered, she debated, she chaffered, but she never could make up her mind to buy and pay for, at any one time, more than a "quarter of a pound of good black Bohea." She would have felt beggared by a pound of any tea at any price; it had always been so precious to her that she had lost all sense of its intrinsic value. Perhaps it represented to some extent the bright unattainable, without which life has no zest.—Lippincott's.

A Curious Telephone.

"I have a most remarkable telephone in my house," remarked a resident of the western addition. "I noticed that at times I could hear very distinctly the conversation in the next house. Suddenly it would be broken off short in the middle of a sentence, and I could not hear another word. It would become audible again just as suddenly.

"By a series of experiments I have found out that the sound is conducted by the water running through the pipes. When the water is turned on in my house, I can hear all the conversation in any of the rooms next door in which there is running water. When I turn off the water, all sounds stop suddenly.

"I told my neighbor of it, and we have put it to practical use. When I wish to speak to him, I tap on the window, he turns on the water in his house and listens while I talk to him over the water pipe in an ordinary tone of voice. When I have finished, he turns off the water in his house, and I turn it on in mine and listen. In that way we can carry on long conversations with as much ease as if he were in the room with me. Still our houses are about 20 feet apart."—San Francisco Post.

Jerry Simpson will not adorn the Fifty-fourth congress, but Peter J. Otey of Virginia more than fills his place with a bill to pension confederate soldiers. Twenty-seven million dollars was received by the treasury from the sale of confederate property during the war and immediately after it, and this Virginia statesman wants congress to appropriate a sum equal to the interest on that sum at five per cent, to be distributed in pensions among the veterans of the Confederacy. The war is over, we admit, but this country will not signalize the fact by pensions to the men who sought to divide it. There never was a more unfit time for such a proposition. From a financial standpoint it is clearly impossible. Cleveland has run the country in debt $306,000,000 already, and it is altogether unlikely that any Republican congress will vote to add $27,000,000 to that debt, especially for the purpose of pensioning rebels. We are glad the war is over, but we are not glad $27,000,000 worth. The Confederates went into the rebellion with their eyes open, and they have no claim on national bounty now.

A Good House For Sale.

Having just finished a good, double-tenement house in the growing village of Barton. I offer the same for sale, and, if I can effect a sale, will soon erect another good set of buildings on another lot.

The house is situated on the Owen purchase on High Street, and is built on the pleasantest lot on the street. The house is planned for two tenements with plenty of room in each. It is well and conveniently built, has the village water, can have electric lights if desired, and is a very desirable piece of property. There is a great call in the village for tenements and for rooms, and this house can be rented at once to pay a good per cent. of interest on its cost. Inquire of
